A Window into Hypnotherapy

-Marie Louise Bosin, MA, LMFT

I would argue that all hypnosis is self hypnosis. As in Psychotherapy, we cannot break a patient out of the trance they have created for themselves without their full cooperation. We must engage a patient first and foremost. We must meet the patient in their story and understand it before we are given permission to offer other possibilities. Hypnotherapy is the art and skill of teaching a patient how to hypnotize herself. An ancient tradition, self hypnosis was probably first used thousands of years ago by the Indian Yogis who used a process called Yoga Nidra to transcend to a higher place of wisdom and bliss. Practically, self hypnosis also is useful in pain relief, maintaining good physical health, calming anxiety and rising up out of depression. Personality issues can also be addressed with self hypnosis. This training will discuss the history and principles used in Hypnotherapy and will walk the participants through Three different self hypnosis experiences.

IE-CAMFT Meeting June 24, 2011

A Window into Hypnotherapy

Objectives:

1. Explore the history of self hypnosis
2. Explore the principles of self hypnosis
3. Experience 3 forms of self hypnosis
4. Translate the understanding and skills into use in the practice of Psychotherapy

Speaker: Marie Louise Bosin, MA, LMFT
Certified Clinical Hypnotherapist
Certified Experienced Yoga Instructor and Practitioner

Marie Louise Bosin is a Licensed Marriage and Family Psychotherapist working in the Inland Empire. She started her journey into the field in 1981 when she returned to Santa Clara University to obtain a Masters Degree in Counseling Psychology with a Health Psychology emphasis. She has worked in many clinical settings during the 30 year journey and has most recently opened a private practice office centrally located in the Inland Empire. Her fascination with the spiritual aspects of psychotherapy has roots in her own recovery and healing. She infuses hypnotherapy into all aspects of her practice regardless of the technique being employed. In this way, she offers solution focused psychotherapy inviting her patients to actively engage in the healing process.

2 CEUs available for full attendance at IE-CAMFT meeting.

IE-CAMFT members: No additional cost. It's a benefit.

Non IE-CAMFT members: $10.00.

IE-CAMFT Mission Statement:

We are professional visionaries dedicated to providing training, networking, and advocacy for Marriage and Family Therapists to promote healthy individual, and couple and family relationships.

With the above mission in mind, please consider the following invitation to speak before IE-CAMFT at a future date.

Dear Members:

One of the best known ways to build your practice is to get into the community and speak about your expertise. And, your local association of therapists is interested in learning new theories, skills, tools, and approaches to treatment. Share your knowledge, experience and wisdom with us!

I am looking for presenters for these future IE-CAMFT meetings in 2011:

Friday September 23 8:30am-10:30am
Friday October 28 8:30am-10:30am
Friday December 2 8:30am-10:30am

There will also be opportunities in March, April, May and June 2012.

I'd be thrilled with 1) your self-nomination, or 2) recommendations of other talented folks.

The more recommendations the merrier!

Call or text me at 951-347-1837, or e-mail me at Doreen@ABetterWayCenter.com

"To be happy with a man you must understand him a lot and love him a little. To be happy with a woman you must love her a lot and not try to understand her at all."

-Helen Rowland quotes (English-American writer, 1876-1950)

President's Message:

Another month. Students say, "June. Finally." But their elders say "June already?"

James Russell Lowell, a poet, penned the following:

"What is so rare as a day in June!
Then, if ever come perfect days.
Then heaven tries earth, and if it be in tune
Over it softly her warm ear lays.
Whither we look or whether we listen
We hear life murmur, and see it glisten.
Every clod feels a stir of might,
An instinct within it that reaches and towers
And groping blindly above it for light
Rises to a soul in grasses and flowers."

Obviously I'm quoting from memory this glorious invitation to life. I was in grade school in the thirties. For chivalrous Sir Launfal, armored knight on horseback, this came as a call to set out on the noble quest to rescue a damsel in distress. Barely out the door,

"As Sir Launfal made morn through the darksome gate
Twas 'ware of a leper crouched by the same,
Who begged with his hand and moaned as he sate.
And a loathing over Sir Launfal came,
The flesh 'neath his armor 'gan creep and crawl
And midway in its beat, his heart stood still
Like a frozen waterfall.
The one great blot on the summer morn,
So he tossed him a piece of gold in scorn."

But this is an articulate beggar, who acts with dignity. The narrator shows us

"The leper raised not his gold from the dust, (saying)
Better to me the poor man's crust,
Better the blessing of the poor,
Though I turn me empty from his door.
That is no true alms which the hand can hold.
He gives nothing but worthless gold
Who gives from a sense of duty.
But he who gives but a slender mite,
And gives to that which is out of sight,
The thread of all sustaining beauty,
Which flows through all and does all unite.
The hand cannot hold the full of his alms,
A heart outstretches its eager palms,
And a soul goes with it that makes it store
To the soul who was wandering in the darkness before.
He who gives himself with his alms feeds three,
Himself, his hungering neighbor, and me."

I don't own a copy of the "Vision of Sir Launfal." It owns me. What's my point? I want to tune into the season to share something beautiful with you, which may remind you of who you are. You're not a knight in shining armor, nor a beggar at the gate. The poet dwells in you too.

Surely, at least at the outset, we may have been as idealistic and rescue obsessed as Sir Launfal. We've paused long enough to get to know our clientele, who don't scold us (as much) as the beggar. Indeed, the coin goes the other way, for the rental of our love-in-action. Now we get to the moral of the story, not Lowell's, but mine. I seek to illustrate, for there may be even more here for us to emulate.

Notice how aware the poet is of the world about him, which his poetry lets us share. Therapists live in a wider world than their clients. The burdened are hardly aware. We invite them to take second look at what's close at hand. Had they arrived without a care in the world (which doesn't happen until maybe the final session?) One may say, "Where would you like to be? Are we indoors or outdoors? Describe what you see. And listen. What do you hear? What is that scent in the breeze? I thought I sensed something tasty. What is that?"

With our suffering client, however, the stark contrast between the pain inside and effusive joy about him, would depress him more than ever. He is not yet ready for our world, so we join him in his. He is no longer alone. That's a plus.

And so he's ready to follow the process above to introduce us to what it is in his private situation that brings with it such misery. We alight from our mountain peak and enter his dark cave. We are prepared, having been near where he is, but now we have life within us.

The poet lives within all about him. He sees, hears, smells and savors. The imagery seeps into his soul and out through his delicate touch. Like the artist, he confronts the block of marble, sculpts here and there, and lets out an angel.

One doesn't despair over the ugly, simply unfinished work before him, for hard rock houses a spirit image yet to be manifest in flesh and blood. Sound a little like "My Fair Lady?" No. Mr. Higgins hadn't heard of 'transference.' Though 'berthing' may strain the physician too.

We're wiser, or better trained, or are living fulfilling lives. If coupling and family life have lifted us, we are models from whom clients welcome a boost. Note the "rare day in June" imagery. Sunshine and sprinkling are all the clod needs "to feel a stir of might, an instinct within it that reaches and towers, and groping blindly above it for light, rises to a soul in grass and flowers."

Fellow travelers, who never pass by the gate to the other side, behold what it is we do and how we do it stirs the nascent poet in us all.

IE-CAMFT Meeting Past (May 2011):

In our May meeting our own IE CAMFT member, Doreen Van Leeuwen, presented part II of Imago Relationship Therapy. A background of Imago Relationship Therapy can be read in our March 2011 newsletter, and a synopsis of part I of Imago Relationship Therapy can be read in our April 2011 newsletter. To expand what we learned in April, Doreen presented us with a video of Hedy and Yumi, amazing experts in Imago Relationship Therapy, conducting their workshops. Hedy and Yumi are a happily married couple who travel around the world, speaking a number of different languages, and presenting their workshops on Imago Relationship Therapy. Yumi describes their workshops as laboratories. In each laboratory, he and his wife are changing relationships for the better; and if they build enough laboratories, they can change enough relationships to have a positive impact on the world.

The video focused on the key concept of "crossing the bridge" a metaphor for one leaving his/her "world view" and entering that of the partner. All dialogues in this therapy begin with inviting one's partner "across the bridge" for some kind of dialogue. One reason for inviting a partner across the bridge for a dialogue is to make sure one has the full and undivided attention of the partner; however, Hedy and Yumi discuss the true essence and symbolic nature of "crossing the bridge." Though we all share the Earth, we all live in our own worlds; we all have unique histories, thoughts, emotions, and ways of doing things. When one invites their partner across the bridge, they are inviting them into their own world. It is essential for the one who gets invited to completely leave their world behind; their thoughts, resentments, judgments, and ways of doing things. All of these things must be left behind, on the other side of the bridge, so that when one crosses the bridge into their partner's world, they are viewing the situation from their partner's point of view rather than their own.

This is essential because of the nature of how relationships form, as discussed in the previous articles about Imago Relationship Therapy. Humans unconsciously pick mates who resemble someone important from their childhood, such as their parents. This innate mate picking habit of humans leads to relationship problems because one will repeat an unhealthy pattern to try to fix the problem they had with that important person through their spouse. For example, a woman with an alcoholic father may marry a man with alcohol dependence problems. She will try to encourage her husband to become sober; however, this battle with sobriety is not just with her husband. This battle of sobriety represents the battle she fought with her father and lost. The woman is unconsciously trying to win the battle she lost with her father, by winning the battle with her husband. Essentially, this means that every argument the couple has about the husbands drinking is not just about the husbands drinking, it is also about the father's alcoholism and all the negative feelings that went along with it. These arguments between the couple cannot be productively resolved until the arguments are only about the couple.

Hedy and Yumi explain that this is the importance of truly "crossing the bridge," into the partner's world. For the previous example, crossing the bridge for this woman would mean leaving all her emotional baggage about her father being an alcoholic behind and listen to her husband discuss his drinking problems with her, and how it's affecting their relationship as a married couple. On the other hand, when the husband crosses over the bridge into his wife's world, she would then have the opportunity to share with her husband some of that baggage. In this situation, the husband crossing the bridge might sound something like this:

Wife: I'd like to invite you across the bridge into my world for a dialogue.

Husband: Ok, I'm crossing the bridge, and I'm here in your world now.

Wife: Growing up, my home was a hostile environment because of my father's drinking. It got so bad that my mother finally gave him the choice of his alcohol or his family. He chose the alcohol. I loved him so much, and I would have done anything for him, but he didn't love me enough to stop drinking; alcohol meant more to him than his daughter. When you refuse to quit drinking, I feel the same way. I feel like by continuing to drink, you are telling me the same thing as my father, that you do not love me; that alcohol is more important than me, and it really hurts me.

The husband would then mirror what he heard from his wife and ask if that is all, as discussed in the April newsletter. By doing dialogues such as these, the couple is learning how to recognize that problems from the past are affecting the way they see their partner, and how to get passed their unfinished problems with the people in their histories so that they do not try to fix their past problems through their spouse. Once a couple can learn to stop arguing about things and people from their past, they can focus on the couple; and once a couple can focus on them as a couple, true healing can take place.

Imago Relationship Therapy is truly a great tool to help couples learn how to communicate, and heal through that communication. If you have any questions about Imago Relationship Therapy, or are interested in becoming a certified Imago Relationship Therapist, you can contact Doreen Van Leeuwen at:

A window into Hypnotherapy

- Marie Louise Bosin, MA, LMFT

I would argue that all hypnosis is self hypnosis. As in Psychotherapy, we cannot break a patient out of the trance they have created for themselves without their full cooperation. We must engage a patient first and foremost. We must meet the patient in their story and understand it before we are given permission to offer possibilities. A person spends a lifetime creating her story. As a result of her constitution, her experiences and her purpose, she creates a story for her life and lives it out with full conviction. Your story colors your thoughts, feelings, perceptions, beliefs and actions.

As a Psychotherapist, I task myself with challenging the trance of the status quo story and inviting people to consider other possibilities. This focus in my work allows me to be creative in my approach to working with patients. The tools I have accumulated over the 35 years I have been studying and practicing all come to good use at one time or another in helping my patients use self hypnosis to create a new story, a story that allows them to relax into the flow of their lives trusting that they already have all the wisdom and information needed to meet, greet and respond to every circumstance they might encounter.

Self hypnosis is a very ancient tradition for the human race. We can go back thousands of years to the inception of Sanskrit as a form of communication and see that the Yogis of India used a form of self hypnosis called Yoga Nidra. Yoga Nidra invites patients to consider staying still while they observe the ever-changing phenomenon of their lives. "It only asks that they observe their natural tendency to want to change what is present into some other more desired condition." Richard Miller.

"Women marry men hoping they will change. Men marry women hoping they will not. So each is inevitably disappointed." - Albert Einstein

People have used many endeavors in life to hypnotize themselves in a healing way. Art, Dance, Devotion, Relationships, Scientific study, Exercise, Music and many other creative endeavors have been used by people to effect change in their lives. All creative endeavors require focused attention. If you talk to someone about their creative process, you will hear them describe self hypnosis. They enter an altered state where the restrictions we put on ourselves are not as important any more. As a result of this altered state, they begin to see the bigger picture. They begin to pull from the collective unconscious (the phenomenon and wisdom that connects us all as defined by Carl Jung) to broaden their view of their world. This is essentially self hypnosis.

Self hypnosis is effective in psychotherapy because it invites patients into a creative process. Hypnotherapy is not problem focused, it is solution focused. By teaching our patients the art of self hypnosis, we work ourselves out of a job which I believe should be our primary intent. We don't want our patients to need us in order to respond to life. We want them to have their own unique connection with this higher consciousness so that at the drop of a hat, they can access the wisdom that lies therein. We want our patients to be able to reduce their suffering and struggling against life. We want our patients to be able to relax, knowing that they have the wisdom necessary to change the way they think, feel, perceive and believe in order to make life more fulfilling for themselves and others.

This is why I love my work. I observe this happen rapidly with my patients. In just a few sessions people begin to open to the miracles and beauty of life. I love my job.

I don't worry about terrorism. I was married for two years

A man in love is incomplete until he is married. Then he's finished.

Before marriage, a man declares that he would lay down his life to serve you; after marriage, he won't even lay down his newspaper to talk to you.

There's a way of transferring funds that is even faster than electronic banking. It's called marriage.

Marriage is an adventure, like going to war.

Marriage is a wonderful invention: then again, so is a bicycle repair kit.

Marriage is like a phone call in the night: first the ring, and then you wake up

My wife suggested a book for me to read to enhance our relationship. It's titled, "Women are from Venus, Men are Wrong."

When a man steals your wife there is no better revenge than to let him keep her.

It's a funny thing that when a man hasn't anything on earth to worry about, he goes off and gets married.
